In discussing a lecture delivered before the Society of Atts in London by Mr. Alexander Siemens, on the transmission of power by electricky, the London Standard says that he dealt with a subject which is destined to play a conspicuous pert in the future of the world's history. "It would seeem," it says, "as if much we have hitherto deemed wonderful and almost perfect in the demain of practical science was about to vanish away. A new competitor en-ters the field, armed with a cubile and irresistible power, and premising not merely to perform old things in a botter way, but to accomplish that which has been hitherto unattempted, i not altogether undreamed of. Even the rail way-the perfection of mechanical and engineering art-is not secure. It may, indeed, remais; but there seems a possibility of undergoing a change which will make it a new thing altogether. Experimental railways worked by electricity have been known for about two years; but a commencement has now been made in a business like form, and the suburbs of Berlin are now to witness the opening of a public line of railway, in which the moving power takes the shape of electricity. The begin-ning is small, but it is real, and as it al-

man capital gives yet more convincing proof. The great potency of the invention consists in the transmission of the motive current by a simple wire. Whether through a cable or more NewSpring Styles Boots & Shoes strand, nothing can be more facile than this mode of communication. The wire can be buried or hung aloft, or twisted or turned in any desired direction. The distance to which the current osa be conveyed, and the amount of energy lost in the transit, are matters which more immediately affect the commonical aspect of the question. But sllowing that only half the power expended can be recovered and turn ed to account, Mr. A. Siemens shows that cheapoess would be affected in many instaness as compared with the use of small steam engines. The idea is that of a central station, where powerful steam engines, working on the most conomical principles. would drive a number of electrical machines to produce the required currents. It would be easy to lay wires from the central station, in the same way as we see them now laid in east iron pipes in the city. From these main wires there would be janctions leading into the houses, and there would be no difficulty in providing two separate currents-one for lighting and the other for power-to be used as required. Already we have the city illuminated by means of currents generated at a distaces ones thought impracticable. The transmission of power by the electric current is showe, not only by the Siemens Railway, but by various other applications. Cranes are worked and ropes are pulled by this agency at Charlton, near London, while double furrow ploughs and also a threshing machine have been we: ked by a Gramme machine in France. Dr. Siemens 14 making the electric current perform all kinds of bacdiwork at his country residence near Tunbridge Wells, the result being that one man at the farm is enabled to do the work which would otherwise cosupy three-a fact which may claim attention from the agricultural interest hard pressed by foreign competition. Bir William Armstrong has utilized the power of falling water for the working of a machine whereby he gains sufficiant electricity to light up thirty or forty 8 wan lamps. Dr. Siemers tures a wire fence to account by making it take the return current. In addition to the proposal for establishing a central station whence the power should be trans-mitted to the points where its use was required, Mr. A. Siemens suggested that secondary batterice, similar to those constructed by M. Plante and improved by M. Faure, should be employed to receive the electricity and keep it ready for focation. It will light our dwellings without creating smoke, and will give us all the power of the steam engine without the nusisnes of its presence. The engine—or a motor of some kind—must indeed be employed, but it may be a mile distant or more from the spot where its power is finally given out. For the present there is happily the prospect of much that will benefit manking. Electricity displays all the properties of a most obedient servant. It is said to differ from water or air in having no "mass" or inertis. It is imponderable, and loses none of its energy in turning a corner. Applied to a rail-road train it could be made to turn every whoel, and not merely the two which are now driven by steam in the locomotive.

use-in the same manner as gas lestored in large gasholders, and as accumulators are used in connection with hydraulic machinery. But the question arises, whether by storing this tromen-dous force we are likely to create any new source of peril. For the present, electricity ap-pears to be the most beneficent of geni. It threatens us neither with fire, explosion nor suf-

DR. E. C. WEST'S NERVE AND BRAIN TREATready presents the appearance of success we may leok for its extension. The Prussian authorities have efficially decided that the vehicle thus travelling on rails is a trameur, and must not go at a higher average speed than nine English miles, or just a fraction more, per hour. This so called trameur is in reality an electrical carriage, very well capable of performing in about five minutes the journey on which it is compelled to expend twice that amount of time. There is no resean why several carriages, each with its own electrical applicance, should not be igined in the leaders of the second transport of the carriages, each with its own electrical applicance, should not be igined in the leaders of the carriages of the carriages. We guarantee in propaid on receipt of price. We guarantee in the carriages applicance as a positions, Nervous Hoadache, Mental Deprocusions, Nervous Hoadache, Mental Deprocusions, Loss of Memory Spermatorshes, Imponency, Involuntary Emissions, Promature Old Age, caused by over-exertion, selfabuse, or over indulgence, which leads to misery, decay and death. We guarantee six boxes to cure any case. With each order received by us for six boxes, accompanied with five dollars, we will send the purchaser our writown electrical appliance, should not be joined in one train. The motive power will thus be equal to the surmounting of steep gradients, and the machinery could in an instant be made to exercise the most effective brake power.

The practicability of an Ficetric Railway is already demonstrated. People may see it for thems: lees at the Crystal Palace, and the German capital gives yet more convincing proof.
